

Contents Scientific Research In World War II

- Introduction: Ordinary Scientists in Extraordinary Circumstances by Ad Maas.
- Chapter 1. The Mobilisation of Science and Science-Based Technology during the Second World War: A Comparative History by Mark Walker.
- Chapter 2. To Work or Not to Work in War Research?: The Case of the Italian Physicist G.P.S. Occhialini during WWII by Leonardo Gariboldi.
- Chapter 3. Scientific Research in the Second World War: The Case for Bacinol, Dutch Penicillin by Marlene Burns.
- Chapter 4: Preventing Theft: The Kamerlingh Onnes Laboratory in Wartime by Dirk van Delft.
- Chapter 5: Electron Microscopy in Second World War Delft by Marian Fournier.
- Chapter 6: "Splendid Isolation"?: Aviation Medicine in World War II by Alexander von Lünen.
- Chapter 7: National Socialism, Human Genetics and Eugenics in the Netherlands 1940-1945 by Stephen Snelders.
- Chapter 8: The Birth of a Modern Instrument and Its Development during World War II: Electron Microscopy in Germany from the 1930s to 1945 by Falk Müller.
- Chapter 9: Aerodynamic Research at the Nationaal Luchtvaartlaboratorium (NLL) in Amsterdam under German Occupation during World War II by Florian Schmaltz.
- Chapter 10: Masa Takeuchi and His Involvement in the Japanese Nuclear Weapons Research Programme by Masakatsu Yamazaki.
- Chapter 11: The Cyclotron and the War: Construction of the 60-inch Cyclotron in Japan by Keiko Nagase-Reimer.
- Chapter 12: Forging a New Discipline: Reflections on the Wartime Infrastructure for Research and Development in Feedback Control in the US, UK, Germany and USSR by C. C. Bissell.
- Chapter 13: British cryptanalysis: the breaking of 'Fish' traffic by J. V. Field.